If you are wondering why I haven't posted anything or replied to any comments for the last 5 days, it's because the power and internet have been out from 2023-02-13 10:00 until 2023-02-19 16:00 (UTC+13:00), because the river burst its banks and flooded the substations (and loads of houses, roads and farmland). Luckily our house didn't get flooded, but loads did, only a few km away. I have recorded some footage of the devastation left behind after the flood, which I will probably upload to @WoOS_Historic_Vlogs within the next week or two when I get round to editing it (I've got loads to catch up on now I've got power and internet for the first time in 5 days).

In Windows 10 the caption buttons are wider than they are in Windows 8.1. So on some small apps, there isn't enough space for the title.

I have made a program in C# that takes a number and displays the English word for it. It can display a single number, count to a number, display numbers within a given range, or display numbers within a given range with a given interval. For "Single number" or "Range with interval" it can take a fractional number, but for "Count to number" or "Range" it can only take an integer. You can also change some o...

What number do you normally start counting from?

4.1K votes

World of OSes 3 months ago

When writing ordinal numbers in English, if the last digit is 1 it is followed by "st", if the last digit is 2 it is followed by "nd", if the last digit is 3 it is followed by "rd", and if the last digit is 0, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 or 9, it is followed by "th". But if the penultimate digit is 1, the number is always followed by "th", regardless of the last digit.

I have seen people get this wrong in the comments. For example, I have seen people write "32th", which should be "32nd" because the last digit is 2 and the penultimate digit is not 1.

So many people have asked me how I set 320x200 in VMware, so I made a video on how to set the resolution to 320x200 in VMware, and how to record and scale it properly (so that you can see each pixel, not blurry). I decided to upload the video to my second channel since it's not really good enough to put on my main channel.
